Southern Teachers is assisting National Presbyterian School with its search for a Director of the Upper Division, which serves children in grades two through six. The Director will be responsible for managing the daily operations of the division’s academic program. General duties include supporting, observing, supervising, and evaluating faculty; monitoring student progress and providing for individual academic and personal guidance as needed; and working closely with the Head of School, Director of the Lower Division, Director of Curriculum and Instruction, and other members of the administrative team.

The ideal candidate will have experience and a demonstrated record of success as an elementary educator and administrator. He or she will have a commitment to children; a familiarity with childhood development, educational approaches, and curriculum; the skills to lead, support, and mentor faculty; and the ability to function as a collaborative member of a school community. The Director will have excellent verbal and written communication skills, a high degree of integrity and trustworthiness, and a warm personality and positive spirit.

National Presbyterian School is an independent, co-educational day school in Washington, DC that enrolls 275 children age three through sixth grade. Committed to an elementary-only school experience, NPS celebrates those fleeting and foundational years in its two divisions: Lower (nursery-first grade) and Upper (grades two through six). National Presbyterian School works to nurture each child’s sense of self and to promote a life-long love of learning so that its graduates can enrich their communities and the world. The school embraces and seeks to engender in its students five core values: love, respect, honesty, responsibility, and safety.
